

The Insane and President Fillmore.

During the visit recently made to New York by President Fillmore, he called at the Lunatic Asylum, in Utica, and some of the incidents of the novel scene are thus described by the New York Mirror:

"On entering the chapel where some two hundred of these unfortunates were quietly seated, the over-seer introduced the President of the United States, when all rose, respectfully bowed, and resumed their seats. Each member of the party was then introduced by name, when the same ceremony was profoundly repeated. Dr. Maltby, a wise lunatic, then rose and welcomed the President in a strain of graceful and touching eloquence that drew tears to every eye. He is a tall, thin, pale man, with penetrating eyes, a fine voice, and gestures belonging to the polite oratory of 'gentlemen of the old school.' The President's reply was also very happy and affecting. So orderly and so well behaved a company surely has not greeted him in all his travels. In one of the female wards, the whole party was individually introduced to an elegantly dressed, and most accomplished lady, the daughter of one of the distinguished lawyers New York has ever produced. She had the right word ready for every one who addressed her, and presented the President with a sweet little bouquet of her own arranging, in the most tasteful and graceful manner. We saw the same 'act of presentation' performed a hundred times, but in no instance with such exquisite simplicity and grace, as marked the offering of this accomplished lady. She is about forty years of age; and in mentioning the names of some of the distinguished men she had entertained at her father's house, added—'but for the last seven years I have been—very much out of the world.'"

There was a young girl in the Asylum, who attracted much attention by her beauty of person and elegance of dress. She did not appear to be over seventeen years of age, and there was not the slightest indication of lunacy, or even of 'irregularity' about her.

She stood in the door of her room, which was adorned with flowers, gracefully acknowledging the bows of the visitors, though no one presumed to speak of her. She wore a beautiful wreath of peach a cherry blossoms in her dark hair; the only ornaments appropriate to her rare and touching beauty. Thinking of the 'fair Ophelia' and the heart broken 'Bride of Lammermoor,' and all the delicate feminine harp-strings that were ever broken by sorrow or sin, we left the beautiful Lunatic, and for hours afterwards, every sound seemed a moan, every breeze a sigh, and even the 'drops of the morning' which glistened in the flowers, looked more like tears of sadness than gems of joy.

THE RAPPING SPIRITS IN CINCINNATI.—Our worthy friend of the Cincinnati Gazette made a visit the other day to the spirit-rappers, and thus he relates his experience:

We accompanied a friend in a visit to the ladies now stopping at the Walnut Street House, who profess to be in communication with the spirit world, and as we are at our post to keep this world advised of all that is strange or startling, we now give our experience.

We were introduced into a room, across a portion of which extends a plank partition, and upon a sofa in front of this, with three card-tables in front of them, sat three ladies. One elderly, the second a girl, the third a woman about twenty-five years of age. They appeared to us very lady-like, and rather modest than otherwise. We were invited to seat ourselves at the tables, and in a few moments the rappings began. Our companion took a pencil and wrote a name, of which we give the initials, J. A. P., and asked if the spirit whose name he had written would communicate. Immediately a number of quick raps were heard, that we were told indicated the affirmative. Still holding his hand over the name our friend wrote, 'In what year did you die?' Answer—1822. 'Where did you die?' Answer—Washington City. 'Where are you buried?' Answer—Cincinnati.

Now, in these, and dozens more of a private character, still more startling, that we cannot publish, all answered correctly. Our friend was careful to keep the question and response to himself. We were completely puzzled, and as Greely Bryant, Godwin, and many others have been, we are not ashamed to own up. But immediately upon the track of this came an evidence that was not so conclusive.

Our friend wrote the name of a number of diseases and asked, 'which of these have I most to fear?' Answer—Blindness.

As he has been threatened with this for several years, the response was certainly very frightful. But while dwelling upon the sad news just given, the alphabet was called for and this sentence spelled out:

"Do not fear him—we are ever with you."

Now, to what does that him refer? He must remember our friend asked at that point, which of these have I most to fear, and a by-stander must infer he had written the names of men—enemies he dreaded—and then the answer spelled out would directly apply. And so it would appear the mediums make no such error as this.

Yet, when we remember that in the first instance a correct account was given of a man, many years dead, and that of a claim of a very complicated nature—even to giving the name of Judge McLean—we must confess we are much puzzled. Accounting for the very peculiar noise is small satisfaction, as the strangest part is the wonderful intelligence that is communicated. We will keep our readers advised.

The speech which John Van Buren delivered before the Vermont democratic free-soil convention throws some light on the compromise laws, which have been lauded by one of the candidates for Congress in this district as something which the South ought to rejoice over. Mr. Van Buren began by describing the progress of the free-soil party and showing what advances it has made in its principles by the compromise laws. Said he:

"It may safely be assumed that the earnest contest of 1848 (that is the contest of free-soilism as led to the prohibition of slavery in that State (California). The rapid pulsations of the great heart of liberty injected the blood of freedom into the veins of California, and she came thus into the Union, a free State. She came in as the thirty-first State attached to her to neutralize her strength as Maine had in Missouri, and Iowa had in Texas, and as the South claim should always be done when a free State was created. The majority of the States of this confederacy thus became free."

The entire Pacific coast of the United States was dedicated to freedom by the prohibition of slavery in Oregon and California. The slave-trade has also been prohibited in the District of Columbia, and a power has thus been exercised over that subject which the South have denied and zealously resisted. The same power exists to abolish slavery itself in the District, and its eventual exercise is thus rendered a mere question of time. The ground assumed by the Buffalo convention was that slavery within the United States should be exclusively controlled by the States themselves, but that the General Government should relieve itself from all responsibility for the evil, by abolishing its introduction where it did not then exist. The brief statement shows the extent to which the doctrine of that convention have thus far been carried into the action of the government and it seems to me, furnishes just ground for exultation to the advocates of those doctrines."

It is the enactment of the series of bills here spoken of as the evidence of the power of abolition that the South is now called upon to approve. Mr. Van Buren then went on to develop the motives which actuated the free-soilers in the last presidential canvass. He subsequently showed how slavery can be reached in all the territories by three different methods. First he declared that it ought to be prevented by positive law. If this means could not be applied, then it was in the power of Congress to abolish it in the territories where it exists; or, thirdly, all slave territories applying for admission to the Union could be remained until they rid themselves of the evil. Said he:

"If slaves are introduced into New Mexico and Utah, slave states will be formed in those territories, and will apply for admission into the confederacy. They should be met at the doors of Congress with stern and unyielding resistance. They should be charged with having covered a free land with the ignominy of slavery and should be turned back upon themselves until they restored freedom to its ascendancy."

These sentiments were heartily applauded by the convention.

Mr. Van Buren then spoke of the Democratic party of the north, and declared that his hopes rested on that party, to effect these great anti-slavery ends. Said he:

"In the State of New York, a cordial and thorough union has been formed between the two sections of the democratic party. The first fruits of that union is the election of seventeen democrats to Congress, instead of two; and whilst I have no authority to speak their sentiments, on any subject I think I may safely affirm that sixteen of them would to-morrow vote for a repeal of the fugitive slave act.—Mobile Herald."

McAllister the Magician and the Mari-et Woman. McAllister, the famous magician was passing through one of our markets the other morning, accompanied by a friend, when they suddenly paused before an old woman who had a few dozen of eggs to sell.

"Are these eggs fresh?" enquired Mac. "Yaw, dey ish very fresh," was the reply.

"I may try a few I suppose, to prove them, if I pay for all I break?"

Yaw, said the vender of eggs, and McAllister immediately proceeded to break one.

"Good gracious!" he exclaimed, with feigned astonishment, "What is this?" and he picked out a $20 gold piece. The woman started in surprise. McAllister broke another egg—the woman crying him closely—when to her increasing surprise, out dropped a $10 gold piece. The magician took up another egg, which he broke when out fell a $5 gold piece upon the stand.

"I rather like these eggs," he quietly remarked, breaking another, and picking up a quarter eagle from among the ruins, by this time the Dutch woman began to get excited, and taking her basket exclaimed—

"I do not like to see mine eggs all broke up on the ground!"

"Oh, nonsense, my good woman, what is that to you so you get your money," returned McAllister.

"At all events, let me have one more egg, and so saying he took another egg, which he broke and extracted from it another gold piece.

The woman now refused to sell another egg at any price. Whereupon the magician and his companion, paying for the damage they had done, continued their walk on through the market. After some little time they returned to the scene of the egg exploits, when to their astonishment, behold the Dutch woman had a crowd around her, and was smashing her eggs as fast as she could but looking in vain for the gold pieces.

"Why what is the matter, my good woman," said McAllister.

"Vere ish de eggs mit de gelt?" shrieked the woman.

"Why, you don't know how to sort them—now, let me see—I'll take this one—"

"No you shant," exclaimed the vender, snatching the egg, and breaking it herself, but with the same mortifying result.

"I guess the good ones are all gone," said the Magician, but as you haven't many left, I'll take the lot at your regular price."

With a sigh, the woman consented, and handed over the basket. McAllister began to examine the eggs closely, and presently began to break them—one—two—three—four—each time producing a gold piece! The Dutch woman could stand it no longer, but seizing one side of the basket, dashed her fist in among them, to the utter demolition of the entire stock. But alas! not a single gold piece could she find. McAllister threw her one, to compensate her for the disappointment and then slipped away—but not before the crowd got an inkling of who he was and to whisper, audibly, the name, McAllister the great Magician.

SABACHTHANI.

Overwhelmed with grief and anguish deep To thee Oh! God I turn, With thou a suppliant from my knee With indignation spurn I've worshiped at an earthly shrine With wild idolatry I've sought in human love But Oh! "Sabachthani."

I must the wine-press tread alone In darkness and despair A wounded spirit one hath said— And wisely who can bear I weep, but tears give no relief, Their pain but bringeth on more grief A broken and a contrite heart That feels "Sabachthani."

Thy faithfulness doth reach the clouds, Thy goodness fills the earth, The sun shines bright as on the morn That gave creation birth— The stars harmonious sing within Their cloud-encircled canopy, Regardless of earth's weary child, Who feels "Sabachthani."

Memory of joys that long have fled, Sweet visions loved and dear, Like phantoms from the vale of death Fit o'er my pathway dear— Sometimes they smile and cheer, again They whisper—murmuringly— Cling not to earth poor mortal—know Earth's joys are not for thee.

My heart is like a temple wreathed With incense from the east, Their fragrance fled, their beauty dead, So cherished once and dear— Each withered leaf, each broken stem Says to me solemnly— 'Thou'st been on broken cisterns,' hence Must feel "Sabachthani."

The temple of my soul is hushed— A voice from heaven's throne, Sadness when father kind consoles And soothes a faithful child— It says "they shall have perfect peace— Where mine mind is stayed on me, Hills before me, and mountains behind, No more Sabachthani."

This "wicked but witty" epigram is from the French of La mon:

The world of fools such a store, That he who would not see an ass, Must hide at home and bolt his door, And break his looking glass.

MARRIED.—On Sunday evening the 29th ult., at 6 o'clock, p. m., by the Rev. John Lusk, at the residence of Wm. R. Cannon, Dr. ALFRED CONNELL, of Claiborne, Ala., and Miss LYDIA McALLISTER CANNON.

OBITUARY.

From the Primitive Republican.

DEPARTED this life on the 22nd inst., at the residence of his son-in-law, W. D. Chapman in this city, at the advanced age of 80 years, Mr. JOSEPH DUNNING, a native of the State Connecticut, but for the last six years a resident of this State. He may truly be said to have conversed with two generations. During the year 1822 he was appointed inspector of the Customs at Middletown, Conn., by that time honored statesman and patriot Thos. J. Jefferson, whose only enquiry in the selection of his officers was, 'is he capable, is he faithful, is he honest,' and well was this enquiry answered by the subject of this brief notice, for this appointment which he received from President Jefferson, he held and filled with credit to himself and fidelity to the country for 40 years, notwithstanding the many changes of administration incident to such a length of time. During the year 1845 aged and infirm as he was, he removed from the State of Connecticut to this State with his aged companion who had shared his joys and his griefs through his long pilgrimage, for the purpose of passing the remainder of their lives with an only daughter who had married and was residing in the town of Aberdeen. They left the companions and associations of their youth, maturity, and old age to be with one, whom but to know, was to love. The writer of this article knew her well, as she had long been a resident in his family and under his roof until she plighted to a husband, her true affectionate, and pure spirit, and truly can the writer attest that she was a rich treasure to any domestic circle. Her name even at this distant period will bring joy to the hearts of his children, who had learned to love her as one of the family—She became united to one who cherished, sustained and comforted her during the ills and evils of life, and it seemed to be the object of her existence, to obtain the society of her aged parents, that she might foster, sustain and minister to their happiness during their declining years. As we do remember, the exulting joy she manifested when their consent was first obtained to come South and spend the remainder of their days with her and her husband who had united his solicitations with her own. Her cup of happiness seemed full to overflowing; but oh! the instability of human happiness! In a few years after their removal South, death entered their happy home, and released the object of their affection from earth—The embrace of a devoted husband, the prayers and tears of devoted parents, and the kind and affectionate regard of friends, could not save their Lucrécia from the grave, otherwise she had still been here to gladden our hearts. But the decree had gone forth—"dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," and the full bloom of youth she was torn from her aged parents and left them to die in the hands of strangers. Since her death, every thing that human sympathy could do, has been done by their son-in-law to render them happy in their afflictions. The old man lingered in mental and bodily suffering for a few years after the death of his daughter, and has ere this met her sainted spirit in Heaven.

This world can never give, The bliss for which we sigh; 'Tis not the whole of life to live, Nor all of death to die."

Mr. Dunning had been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church for the last 40 years and the most of that time an official member. As a man, he was firm, quiet, kind, and unobtrusive—as a husband, considerate, amiable and affectionate—as a father, all that a father could desire—and as a christian, he was a 'living epistle of the doctrines of his Saviour to be read of all men.' In his last moments he gave every assurance to his friends of his acceptance with God, and well might he have exclaimed—

"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give me at that day."

We humbly trust, that the Being, "who tempers the wind of the short lamb" comfort, sustain and support his surviving partner during her short stay upon earth, and that they may be all reunited—a happy family in heaven. G. R. C.

BLAIR'S DRUG STORE. JUST received at this well known establishment a fresh supply of pure and genuine Medicines, which will be sold on as favorable terms as can be had in the South. Physicians, Planters and others, are requested to call and examine the stock, which has been selected with great care for this market. We think they will find it equal (if not superior) as regards quality and variety, to any in the State; and making their purchase altogether from Importing Houses, they are enabled to sell on as good terms, as any Drug House in the South or South West.

PHYSICIANS PRESCRIPTIONS CAREFULLY PUT UP. Dr. James W. Hopkins will attend to the prescription department—a guarantee that all will be right in that delicate and important part of the business. DRUGS, MEDICINES, AND CHEMICALS, PUTTY AND BRUSHES, DYE-STUFFS, PAINTS, OILS, WINDY GLASS, DYE-STUFFS, AND GLASS-WARE, PERFUMERY, FINE SOAP, STEEL PENS, AND SUPERIOR WRITING INK.

A superior article of SPERM OIL, LARD OIL, &c., always on hand. LANDRETH'S FRESH GARDEN SEEDS—Crop 1850.

PATENT MEDICINES OF ALL KINDS: Pure Old Brandy, Whisky, Holland Gin and Old Jamaica Rum—Pure Scotch Whisky—for Medical purposes—and a superior article of TEA, both Green and Black.

SUPERIOR CHEWING TOBACCO AND CIGARS. Thankful for the patronage heretofore extended to the House, he hopes by strict attention and a disposition to accommodate, at low prices, to merit the patronage of a discerning public. JAS. BLAIR.
